| Dé Céadaoin 14 / Wed 14th 1.00-1.45pm | Léacht / Lecture | The Working River, a Harmonious Relationship between City and Port Dublin City's relationship with the River Liffey has been an integral one since the first settlement. Significant sources survive that chart the growth and development of maritime activities along the river, while recent and current development on the riverfront help to expose its detail. The presentation by Niall Brady, Maritime Archaeologist and Director of The Archaeological Diving Company Ltd, highlights the work being done within Dublin Port as part of the Alexandra Basin Redevelopment project, and shows some of the findings that have been made. The age-old dynamic that dictates new design to meet increased trade remains as present today as it has done since the Viking Age, and listeners will sense the richness of the record that speaks to the lively and important history of Dublin's growth as city and port. Please note: This lecture will take place at Dublin Port. Booking required. Wicklow The cluster of eleventh to twelfth century iconic churches, centred on the two lakes at Glendalough, is the epitome of a major Irish ecclesiastical site. Despite this we know little of what the settlement looked like and how it changed over time? What do artefacts tell us about the lives of the people who used the site? Archaeology is the key to understanding more about the origins and development. This talk will focus in particular on the results of excavations undertaken by the School of Archaeology, UCD, led by Dr. Graeme Warren, Conor McDermott and Matt Seaver, Assistant Keeper, National Museum of Ireland. | Dé Domhnaigh 18 / Sun 18th 3pm-3:45pm | Léacht / Lecture | Science Week 2018: Ancient DNA and Irish Prehistory The human genome is the sum of all our genetic information and can tell about our physical characteristics, for example eye/hair colouration or sometimes disease risks, as well as our relatedness to other people and populations. Due to recent advances it is now possible to obtain genomes from bones of people who lived thousands of years ago. Using this technology, we have begun to decipher the genomes of ancient Ireland and find out about the migrations that shaped our people's ancestry and what their genetic make up was. Booking required, please email educationarch@museum.ie or call 01 6486 332. Wheelchair accessible. | Aois 12+ / Ages 12+ |
| Dé Céadaoin 21 / Wed 21st 1pm-2pm | Léacht / Lecture | Mapping, Investigating and Documenting Historic Shipwrecks off the Dublin Coast Dublin's long standing maritime tradition is as strong today as it ever was and manifests itself in many ways ranging from active coastal communities and recreational use of the sea to vibrant fishing fleets and commercial shipping traffic entering and departing Dublin Port on a daily basis. With such large volumes of traffic since the earliest times it not surprising that Dublin has one of the highest densities of shipwrecks anywhere along the Irish coast. This talk by Karl Brady, Underwater Archaeology Unit, National Monuments Service, will present an illustrated update on research undertaken through mapping, documenting and investigating some of the many shipwrecks lost off the Dublin Coast with a particular focus on discoveries made in recent times. Booking required. Please email educationarch@museum.ie or call 01 6486 334. Located in the Kildare Room, Ground Floor. Wheelchair accessible. | Daoine fásta / Adults |

Kildare, in the 19th century. The crosier is one of the treasures of early medieval Ireland, the Golden Age of Irish art. Recent research on its dating, art, techniques, and a fragmentary inscription will be revealed, which, surprisingly, connect this Christian ceremonial object with Dublin. This is an opportunity to learn more about this fascinating object, which has recently been returned to Dublin following an absence of centuries. The lecture coincides with the new exhibition of the crosier in the National Museum of Ireland. Booking required, please email educationarch@museum.ie or call 01 6486 332.
